

St Mark's Hospital: an academic centre and world centre of excellence

St Mark's Hospital in London is the national bowel disease hospital for the treatment of complex diseases requiring an especially high level of expertise and specialism.

More than 60% of the people treated at St Mark's have been referred by other UK hospitals. Our national reach is well established. The expertise that exists at St Mark's is primarily built on innovative research that drives clinical improvements and the development of new services.
